When I glanced at an early "episode" of "The Problem With Weezie" I was appalled that the message it delivered to children was, "If your dog has fleas, get rid of it." Not having time to write, I groused to myself at the inane items relegated to the "Living" section and left it at that.

But now you've gone too far to ignore it. Today (Friday) we are treated to some family idiot treating Weezle for fleas in such a way that all his/her fur falls off. And Dad laughs at it!

Has the "Living" editor joined the brain dead down there, or what???? I look forward to a future little news item about some children trying to make a hairless dog by covering some hapless critter with two cups of flea powder. That is TOXIC MATERIAL, literally and figuratively. When today's children can watch murder on TV and then try it themselves it is not overreacting to envision Junior poisoning the family pooch with a good dusting.

There must be something else that can fill up space in "Living".
